What do you get when you cross a book with a work of art? Almost anything is possible when you're talking about the vibrant and diverse field of artists' books. During the Fall 2010 semester, the libraries at UNC and Duke will be collaborating to put on a series of artists' book exhibits and events.

The Bingham Center holds almost 300 artists' books by women, primarily focused on the multifaceted theme of body politics, including explorations of beauty, sexuality, and women's health. Other works reflect collection strengths such as domestic culture, family relationships, and southern women.

An exhibit highlighting recent acquisitions will be on display from October 11 through the end of December 2010 in the Perkins Library Gallery at Duke University. On Thursday, October 21, book artist and photographer Bea Nettles will give a lecture in the Biddle Rare Book Room in Perkins Library. Nettles has been exhibiting and publishing her autobiographical works since 1970 and is currently professor emerita at the University of Illinois. Her work often centers around themes of family relationships. She has also used her own body to explore topics like women's health and aging.

The Sloane Art Library at UNC-Chapel Hill collects artists' books with a broader focus. Exhibits on the history and evolution of book arts will be on display in August and September in the Hanes Art Center and in October in Davis Library on the campus of UNC-Chapel Hill.

On Tuesday, November 16, Bill and Vicky Stewart of Vamp & Tramp Booksellers will be presenting a trunk show of artists' books as well lecturing at the Hanes Art Center at UNC. The Stewarts represent over 300 contemporary fine presses and book artists and travel all over the country to share their works with institutions and private collectors.

Demonstrations and hands-on workshops in various areas of the book arts will be planned throughout the semester. The series of events will close with a juried artists’ book competition open to students and alumni of Duke and UNC as well as NC residents.

The Sallie Bingham Center recently acquired the papers of Muriel Woods Henderson, a missionary and active letter-writer known to her family and friends as “Ki.” After moving to Portugal in 1947 with her husband Lawrence (Larry) Henderson and their two daughters to learn Portuguese, Henderson and her family served as missionaries in Angola from 1947 to 1969. The collection comprises journals and letters from this time as well as correspondence with friends from Angola with whom Henderson kept in touch throughout the remainder of her life. The collection also contains materials documenting her family’s life in the early 20th century in the Pacific Northwest, mostly in or around her hometown of Tacoma, Washington, including photographs, diaries, children’s drawings and letters, school report cards, diplomas, letters, and ledgers of household expenses. The bulk of the papers relate to Henderson’s personal and family history, encompassing both the Woods and Henderson families with numerous reminiscences from family members.

Installing “The Basement” on the Second Floor

On Monday, April 19, filmmakers Sophie Keir-Thompson and Mary Beth Ross enlisted the help of Bingham Center staff and volunteers to reconstruct Kate Millett’s The Trial of Sylvia Likens, an environmental art installation based on real events described in Millett’s book, The Basement, a compelling account of the life and 1965 death of 16-year-old Sylvia Likens. A full account of this project is posted on the Special Collections Library’s blog, “The Devil’s Tale,” linked below.
