Popular Charlotte Minister Gives Careful Presentation of Religious Truths HE IS A GRADUATE OF DUKE

Rev. Jordan Concerns Himself with College Students' View Points in Two Talks Each Day; Men's and Women's Societies Give Special Music; GYM Arranges Conferences

By HENRY L. ANDREWS
The Rev. G. W. Jordan, popular young minister of Charlotte, is winning such extensive attention of the University community in his frequent presentations of religious truths from the view of the youthful and inquiring mind. The opening service of the week was conducted at the regular vespers last Sunday afternoon in the Duke auditorium, at which time the visiting pastor was introduced by Dr. W. P. Yee, who also extended a cordial welcome on behalf of the University administration and the student organization to the services throughout the week. Special message attending the service was under the direction of J. Foster Brown, social director and director of the gym club.

At the beginning, Mr. Jordan made it clear that he is attempting to see every thing from the point of view of the college student and to concern himself with the many practical questions of student's problems and difficulties as he is able to determine them in the light of the gospel.

The basis of the week's emphasis was proposed in Mr. Jordan's first address on the topic "Why Bother with Religion?" in which he pointed out that the fact that talk of religion is to adjust to the unknown. Science has given man a new view of life concerning the universe. If man should years anything, there will still be a need for religion. All those facts make and signify something, and religion alone is able to give a final and complete interpretation of the world.

Mr. Jordan said that the world is full of religious, and religion at its highest and best is Christianity, and Christianity gives us the most complete interpretation of the universe. The speaker pointed out the fact that the routine of religious life is found in Jesus Christ.

Following such upon this discussion as a result of the "Why Bother with Religion" and the "Scientific Method" as the topic for his address Monday morning. He stressed the fact that religion is not a matter of mere words, but of living things for themselves, that the only way to

SHACK PLET COLLECTORS GO IN FOR DONKEYS AND DOGS

Scattered Celluloid Menagerie Makes It Dangerous to Sit Down at Sougiate

To the casual visitor, some of the rooms at Sougiate must present an alarming appearance nowadays. The tables are covered with a mass of famous pictures, valuable books, or even antique furniture—bits of old furniture. The rooms are full of these things, and even overflow into the halls, corridors, so that one's chances of being down without getting one's feet under a small animal are small indeed.

The picture range all the way from the school dogs and donkeys (the latter are especially attractive because their heads wag, and life size Polka dots are scattered all over the place). The arguments are numerous as to which is the most desirable, a red felt hat that will keep one's hair one's own up nose. The relative merits of a pointed dog and a rubber nose are likewise debated, and those who are in doubt as to dog. Competition is keen to see who can secure the largest collection, though some contend that quality is preferable to quantity and especially in one sort or another.

FROSH WRITES ON NEWEST ARCHIVE

Cub Reporter Bursts Into Print Regarding Latest Outpourings in Archive

By OREN WHITEHEAD
The poems of the January Archive seem to constitute the chief find for expository writers. The new edition of new book reviews, there is little else of real worth to be found in the magazine.

Perhaps an exception to this statement might also be made in the case of P. V. Altvater's "An Apology for Sandwiches Verses" but the measure of this essay is so slight important to justify a paragraph of its involved verbosity.

Another poem which actually spilled into an array of complicated phrases and associations, and to those who are concerned with their superlatively concerned with the trend of modern poetry. Mr. Altvater may have something to say.

Among the poems of the issue this reviewer would assign highest rank to the contribution of Joseph Brown, Jr. In the poem "The Poet," the poet, who is not mentioned, is asked by three anonymous complex tackled by the editor in his development of the idea of self-interest and the treatment of the subject originally to justify its presence in a publication of higher status, but the quality of the poem is high and the other poetic offerings all have some measure of excellence.

Another poem, "Translated," which is of little importance. The one story of the issue is worth, both in plot and writing, having all the common faults of undergraduate fiction.
